On Brass and Breaking

You think yourself a damaged bell
Bird that fell off the wrong branch
Feather at the mercy of the wind
Yet you're no broken brass
No cracked or shattered glass
Litters your feet
You've pulled yourself
Through heartbreak, chance
So full of love to last
Centuries ringing in the wind
On the wings that fell
And in that broken brass bell
That still calls out your name.